

SANDY WALHEIM

WINEMAKER

A veteran in the California winemaking scene, Sandy Walheim oversees the Sonoma County wine program for Francis Ford Coppola Winery. Under her guidance, she and her team skillfully craft the Francis Coppola Reserve wines (single vineyard designates), Director's Cut (Sonoma County sub-appellation), Director's (Sonoma County appellation), Archimedes (the winery's flagship wine) and Virginia Dare Winery. Her keen attention to detail and her comprehensive knowledge of crafting small lot, limited production wines place her in the spotlight as one of Sonoma County's most admirable winemakers, and her down-to-earth personality makes her enviable on all aspects.

As the daughter of a Navy submarine captain, Walheim had the opportunity to travel around the United States from a very early age, experiencing many different communities and landscapes. As her college years approached, she immediately took an interest in California, having spent some enjoyable time on the West Coast in her earlier years. She enrolled in Southern California's UC San Diego, but before long the abundance of seasonal food, wine, outdoor activity and easygoing lifestyle attracted her to Northern California where she joined University of California, Davis. After interning with Domaine Chandon which piqued her interest in "wine county living," she graduated with a degree in fermentation science, launching her career in winemaking.

After graduation, Walheim joined a small boutique winery in Santa Cruz where she mastered the craftsmanship of limited-production, single-vineyard wines, allowing her to incorporate innovative and unconventional winemaking techniques into the wine program. Yearning to expand her knowledge, Walheim moved to Napa Valley five years later and joined the team at Robert Mondavi Winery. The popular, larger production winery provided her with insight not only into winemaking techniques that appeal to a plethora of demographic groups, but the overall business aspect of blending wine sourced from a variety of appellations. Equally enlightening were the times she worked with Cain Vineyard & Winery on Spring Mountain and Beringer Vineyards. It was during her time in Napa Valley that she realized she wanted to return to school to hone in on her business approach to winemaking. She earned a degree in management from St. Mary's College of California, her business competence now complementing her tenured technical artistry. Soon after, she joined Healdsburg's Simi Winery as an associate winemaker where she spearheaded the winemaking efforts as well as the winery's conversion to estate-bottled wines. In this role, she gained valuable knowledge into the diverse appellations of Sonoma County, becoming an expert in the myriad of nuances throughout Sonoma County's distinct terroirs.

When asked what her favorite wine is, she says, "there are a lot of great wines in the world, but sometimes the greatest wine is the one you get to share with friends and family."
